Legal/Business Analyst

Undecided about whether to go to law school or business school?

ABOUT THE FIRM

Pollock Cohen is a fast-growing public impact law firm. Our cases make a difference in people's lives, and we wake up every day excited about the work we do.

POSITION SUMMARY

We are looking for a smart, energetic, highly organized recent college graduate to join our team in a key role: as a legal and business analyst. We want someone who feels comfortable – indeed has a real interest in – bank statements, P&Ls, and numbers. Responsibilities include non-legal research, potential new matter intake, and case support.

We want someone who is probably debating whether to go to law school or business school, but who hasn't yet decided. We ask for a two-year commitment.

You will be joining an established and extraordinary team. A slight variation from the existing job is that this role will be more financial- and business-focused and will contribute particularly to our asset recovery practice. Can you analyze real estate values and discern ownership? Can you follow the money trail and help recover assets? What is your understanding of offshoring assets? How about international transfer tax? You don't need to know the answers, but if you can be ready to dive into these areas, this can be the role for you.

A key difference between this position and similarly-titled – or paralegal – positions at other top firms is that at PC you will have a substantive role in important and varied cases from day one. As one of our current legal analysts wrote, "We don't hire recent grads to toil for us, but rather to work with us."

The ideal candidate will be graduating from a top undergraduate institution, be really interested in the law, and have demonstratable experience as both a self-starter and a team player.

If this sounds like you, we'd like to hear from you. For the right person, this is a spectacular opportunity.
