

The Washington Post: Company Defends Trump's $175 Million Bond In New Filing

In "Company Defends Trump's $175 Million Bond In New Filing," (Washington Post, Apr. 16, 2024), The Washington Post discusses New York Attorney General Letitia James' objections to the $175 million bond Knight Specialty Insurance Company posted on behalf of former president Donald Trump.

In the article, Pollock Cohen managing partner, Adam Pollock, says that while the filing moves the matter in the right direction, "It continues to raise serious questions about whether this bond actually secures the attorney general's judgment. Justice Engoron is clearly going to hold a detailed hearing to examine the issue."

Company Defends Trump's \$175 Million Bond In New Filing | The Washington Post