The Army-Navy Game May Not Be As Important As Academy-Ivy Contest

In “The Army-Navy Game May Not Be As Important As Academy-Ivy Contest” (The Hill, December 12, 2020), Steve Cohen discusses the need for a voluntary exchange program between the military Service Academies and the Ivy League schools for each to learn from the other as a means to reduce the gap in civil-military relations.

To see the full article, click on the link below (subscription may be required).

The Army-Navy Game May Not Be As Important As Academy-Ivy Contest | The Hill